IF YOU HAD BEEN ON THE PAROLE BOARD, WHAT WOULD YOU HAVE DONE IN.... The CASE Of WALLACE GRADY

he faced the parole board. He was willing to talk about his past, a past he would have preferred to forget, in order to pave the way to a future outside of prison walls. It was evident, too, that Grady intended to "come clean" with the board, omitting no details as to the chain of events that had brought him to his current stretch of ten years in the state penitentiary.

"If you've checked my college career," said Grady, "you probably have learned why it ended so suddenly in my junior year. They elected me to the prom committee. They wanted a hard worker to collect the ticket money. I should have turned it over sooner than I did."

"You spent the money?" inquired a member of the board. "How?"

"The big crew race was coming up," replied Grady. "It was a cinch for Tech to win. There was a fellow in town taking bets against us, and I saw a chance so make something for myself. So I put up the prom money."

"And you lost?"

"No. I wee." Gredy's head shake was restul.
"But when I week to collect, the fellow who sook
the bees had skipped sown, taking all the money with him."

"Thee what did you do?"

"I left college and sook a job. The college trees-ing it off. There wasn't any scandal, no accusations - I was grateful for that."

There was brief silence while the members of the parole board turned the pages of their typewritten sheets.

"I wasn't trusting anybody but myself after that," Grady went on, "but I trusted myself too far when I was working as a teller at the Newville National Bank. Handling all that money gave me big ideas, I guess.

"None of the tellers were getting baid enough. Roy Mercer, with a wife and three kids, had received only a couple of small raises. The two other tellers also were married and had been working at the Newville National for five years at practically their starting pay. They joked about it, in a bitter sort of way, but they never did anything to remedy it."

As the parole board listened, Grady's eyes became downcast. It was with effort that he forced himself to admit the crime he had committed while at the bank.

"I embezzied bank funds," Grady said slowly,
"so I could play the stock market I'd been studying the market and I figured I could make up the difference between my salary and what a bank teller ought so get. I should have asked for more money,
I guess, but if the other sellers wouldn't, how could I? They'd base there longer than I had, and they'd marked for a lest less.

"My shortage was discovered before I could make it up. I had the money, you understand. I came through with every last penny. The court recommended leniency in my case and I only served two years. But any chances I had in the banking business were ruined, like my college career."

If his tone could be taken as an indication, Grady wasn't playing for sympathy. He was stating his case simply, directly. It was an old story, and a sad one, to the parole board. They knew too well the difficulties that ex-convicts encountered in the world at large.

"I got a break while I was serving those two years," continued Grady. He lifted his head and smiled feebly. "I don't mean a jail-break. This was another kind. I met a fellow named Doc Ringo, who had gotten a very tough rap. He owned a medicine show, Doc did, and the narcotic agents closed in on a brand of tonic that he peddled. The stuff had dope in it, but Doc thought it met with legal requirements. Because of his own case, Doc was sympathetic toward all the other prisoners who didn't seem to belong there."

"Doc gave me the break I mentioned. Told me where to go and get a job. No questions asked, since Doc Ringo sent me. Circus owners, carnival operators, medical show men - they all knew Doc Ringo and like as not he'd financed some of them. So I landed with a carnival called the Tri-State Greater Shows, and by the following season I was managing the outfit."

Again Grady paused while the rustle of typewritten sheets told that his listeners were catching up with the record. Then:

"I wanted to make up for lost time," explained Grady. "If I could only buy into a carnival, I knew I'd soon own it. That's why I faked a robbery in the Tri-State office wagon, so I could get the twenty-five hundred I needed to invest in a little carnival that had some big Fair dates coming up. I'd have cleaned up enough to find the money I'd stolen from the Tri-State wagon. But it fluked and that's why I'm serving time now. It's also why I've learned my lesson. There's no fast, easy way to success. There's only the slow, hard way, and I want to try that road instead."

The parole board appeared to be impressed with Grady's story, particularly when the chairman produced a sheaf of corroborative statements proving every detail to be true.

From the treasurer of Tech College was a letter substantiating every fact Grady had given. For years, the college authorities had been unaware of the presence of professional gamblers in the vicinity of the campus. The experience of Wallace Grady had resulted in rigid rules against such characters, with local ordinances that were strictly enforced by the police.

Roy Mercer, now the cashier of the Newvills National Bank, had testified in Grady's behalf. The tellers had been underpaid, Grady's statement said, and grumbled frequently about it. After Wallace Grady went to jail, the bank had upped all tellers' salaries.

Then the chaleman of the passels board introduced a little man with a bald head and wizened face, who answered to the name of Doc Ringo. His own debt to the law paid, Doc still wanted to help those in trouble. He'd have a job for Wallace Grady, he said, the day the parols board set him free.

"I steered a dozen fellows right," declared Doe Ringo, "and they've all made good except Wally, which shows I know how to pick them. It was just a bad break, Grady handling the cash box and seeing a chance for a good investment right at the same time."

It was a still tougher situation, he added, that Grady faced today - the question of whether the parole board should let him serve the limit of his seem or not.

How would YOU have voted in the case of Wallace Grady? If you are curious as to how the parole board voted, turn this page upside down for their decision.

It was obvious that Wallace Grady wangled himself into positions of trust to get his hands on money. To keep him away from such opportunities, the board rejused his application, for parole. Besides, Grady bimself had said he wanted to try the "slow, hard way"—and nothing could better suit that definition than having him finish his full term!

A dozen men-all convicts-went "straight" after Doc Ringo picked them as candidates for jobs. But Grady not only reverted to his crooked pattern; he double-crossed Ringo, his benefactor.

The underpaid reliers at the Newville Nanonal Bank had statted for less than Grady and had families to support, so they needed money more than he did, yet they didn't misappropriate bank funds.

"Wallace Grady had a "gift" for making people regard him as a "special" case, but that didn't wash with the parole board. Gamblers had frequented the Tech campus for years, during which dozens of students, before Grady, had handled college funds, yet he was the first to use such funds to his own ends.

How the Parole Board Reasoned in the Case of Wallace Grady

Stanley the Explorer

FEW men of modern times have lived a more adventurous life than Henry Morton Stanley. He was a cabin boy, soldier, sailor, merchant, newspaper reporter, author and the world's most famous African explorer.

Stanley began life in 1840, in Wales as John Rowlands, the son of a poor farmer who died when Stanley was only three years old. Rolands, as Stanley was then known, was put in a workhouse when 7 years of age and spent most of his boyhood there. When he was 16, he ran away to Liverpool where he got a job as cabin boy on a ship bound for New Orleans. He arrived in New Orleans in 1859 and was given a job by a merchant named Henry Morton Stanley who later adopted him and gave him the name of Stanley.

In 1861, when the Civil War broke out. Stanley enlisted in the Confederate Army but was soon captured. While in the Federal prison camp he was given his freedom by enrolling in the Federal artillery but, was soon dischanged because of poor health. Stanley then took to the sea and was shipwrecked off Barcelona. His next act in 1864, was to join the U.S. Navy. After the War, Stanley went out West and became a prominent newspaper reporter. Later, his reporting took him to Asia Minor, to Tibet and to Abyssinia. In 1867, Stanley was hired by the N. Y. Herald and his biggest assignment which changed the course of his future life, was to find a Dr. Livingstone, a missionary and explorer who was "lost" in the heart of Africa. Stanley did find Livingstone and together they explored the source of the Nile. His reports to his rewspaper on the search for Livingstone made him famous.

In 1928, the Belgium Congo issued a set of 15 stamps all of the same design showing a portrait of Sir Henry Morton Stanley in commemoration of his great explorations and the founding in 1878 of the Congo Free State.
